Early in October the following letter was widely distributed in the schools of the city of Pittsburgh:

CARNEGIE MUSEUM PRIZE ESSAY CONTEST.

PITTSBURGH, PA., OCTOBER 10, 1900.

The trustees of the Carnegie Institute desire to announce the conditions under which the Fifth Annual Prize Essay Contest will be conducted.

The contest will be confined to the pupils of the Pittsburgh High Schools and of Steps 14 and 13 of the Pittsburgh Ward Schools. The pupils of the High Schools will compete in four classes corresponding to their classes in the schools, and prizes will be awarded as follows:

|                        |               |              |             |
|------------------------|---------------|--------------|-------------|
| High School, 4th year, | 1st, $25.00; | 2d, $10.00; | 3d, $5.00. |
| " " 3d                 | " 1st, 15.00; | 2d, 10.00;   | 3d, 5.00.   |
| " " 2d                 | " 1st, 15.00; | 2d, 10.00;   | 3d, 5.00.   |
| " " 1st                | " 1st, 15.00; | 2d, 10.00;   | 3d, 5.00.   |

An award of prizes will be made to scholars in the Ward Schools.

For Step 14 prizes will be awarded as follows:

1st, $15.00; 2d, $10.00; 3d, $5.00, and ten of $2.00.

For Step 13 prizes will be awarded as follows:

1st, $15.00; 2d, $10.00; 3d, $5.00, and ten of $2.00.

Those who enter this competition are expected to visit the Museum and make a thorough examination of its contents, bringing with them for the purpose of assistance and instruction parents and friends, if this can be done. Having carefully studied the Museum, the pupil should then write a composition upon the following subject:

"An Afternoon at the Carnegie Museum."

The contest will begin on Friday, November the 2d, and will terminate on Monday, November the 26th.

The compositions must not exceed 1200 words. When completed it should be addressed and sent to the "Director of the Carnegie Museum, Schenley Park, Pittsburgh, Pa.," not later than November the 26th, in an envelope marked "Prize Competition—High School—First Year," (or Second, or Third, or Fourth Year, as the case may be); or "Prize Competition—Step 14," or "Prize Competition—Step 13," respectively. Each essay must be signed with the assumed name and have pinned to it a sealed envelope marked with the same assumed name, school, and class, and containing a slip of paper on which is written the same assumed name, together with the author's full name, age, address, school, class, and teacher. Envelopes and blanks are provided by the Director of the Museum, and all who intend to compete may obtain these by applying at the office of the Director between the hours of one and five P. M., Sundays excepted.

The prizes will be awarded at a public meeting of the contestants and their friends, to be held at the Carnegie Institute on the evening of Monday, December the 17th, at 8 o'clock.

Those who enter the contest are expected to employ all proper means of obtaining information in reference to the objects concerning which they write, and should consult friends, teachers, and books; but it is a rigid point of honor that the work of composition itself shall be done by the contestants without the aid of a second party. In awarding the prizes the judges will lay chief stress upon spelling, clear expression, and the evidences of general intelligence. Last year 401 pupils entered the competition, which was a very gratifying fact. The Board of Trustees hope that the present contest may elicit even greater interest than that of last year.

W. J. HOLLAND,
Director of the Museum.

The necessary circular of instructions, pledges, and envelopes were supplied to all the contestants who made application for them. So great was the demand that several editions of the circular of instructions were called for before the contest closed.

On November the 26th, eight hundred and forty-three essays were discovered to have been submitted in competition. The remarkable growth in interest and in the number of pupils participating in the contest necessitated a considerable increase in the size of the Board of Judges. With great amiability a number of the leading ladies and gentlemen of the city consented to serve on the Board, which was increased in number to thirty-one persons. At the first meeting Rev. W. A. Stanton, D.D., was elected the Chairman. The work of passing upon the merits of the essays was entrusted to the following sub-committees:

Committee on High School, First Year, Rt. Rev. Cortlandt Whithead, J. J. Miller, Esq., C. W. Scovel, Esq., Miss Alice Thurston.

Committee on High School, Second Year. Jas. R. Macfarlane, Esq., Mrs. H. B. Birch.

Committee on High School, Third Year. Prof. Albert Frost, Miss Kate C. McKnight.

Committee on High School, Fourth Year. Ralph Longenecker, Esq., Mrs. O. D. Thompson.

Committee on Step 14. Rev. H. T. McClelland, Dr. G. W. Allyn, Prof. W. R. Crabbe, Rev. Wm. R. Farmer, Mr. Carroll Fitzhugh, Prof. C. J. Geer, Prof. S. A. Hunter, Miss S. J. Killikelly, Mr. G. F. Muller.

Committee on Step 13. Rev. W. A. Stanton, Rev. Maitland Alexander, Prof. A. D. Armstrong, Rev. T. E. Cramblet, Prof. C. R. Coffin, Dr. Theo. Diller, Mr. W. B. Edwards, Miss Julia Harding, E. E. Kiernan, Esq., Dr. Chalmers Martin, Prof. H. C. Pearson, Prof. H. S. Scribner.

On the evening of December the 17th, the great Music Hall was filled with the pupils of the schools, their teachers and friends. The Trustees of the Institute, the Board of Judges, the Director of the Museum and Mr. Douglas Stewart were seated upon the platform. Mr. C. C. Mellor, the Chairman of the Museum Committee, presided. The exercises were opened by Rt. Rev. Cortlandt Whitehead, who invited the audience to join with him in repeating the Lord's Prayer. Mr. C. C. Mellor then addressed the audience, and took occasion to compliment the pupils in the schools for the great interest and diligence which they had shown. In passing he reminded the young people present that in so great a multitude of contestants all could not expect to take prizes, but dwelt upon the fact that in every case the contestant, no doubt, had derived positive benefit from the effort that had been put forth. Mr. Mellor then introduced Rev. Dr. W. A. Stanton, the Chairman of the Committee of Judges, who spoke as follows:

"When the lad had two loaves and two small fishes, and there were five thousand people among whom they would have to be divided, it was no wonder that Andrew said, 'But what are they among so many?' That was a case of few loaves and much people. But when your Board of Judges met to organize and receive for examination the essays that have been written in this contest, it seemed to them that the old situation by the sea of Galilee had become reversed. Instead of a few loaves and much people, it had become a case of many essays and few people. Multitudinous essays—eight hundred and forty-three! Microsthenic Board of Judges—thirty-one! Judges not all there at that! Essays all there, even to the ribbons, envelopes and postage stamps! From the High School, 212; from Step Fourteen, 258; from Step Thirteen, 373. Altogether eight hundred and forty-three, more than twice as many as last year.

"In his report a year ago, the Chairman, Dr. Dorchester, said of the four hundred and one essays of 1899, 'Truly a formidable collection!' What adjective would he use were he here now and had he wrestled with twice that number? True, the number of Judges was increased by one-third, but the essays increased by seven-thirds. While this remarkable increase in the quantity of essays was woeful to the Judges, it is in the highest degree complimentary to the teachers and pupils of the classes contesting for prizes. To Director Holland it must be a cause for sincere gratitude that he and the Trustees of the Carnegie Institute have succeeded in arousing such genuine and beneficial enthusiasm as to produce such results in what is only the fifth annual contest. Who dares foretell what will be next year?

"Let me tell the contestants here to-night how the Judges felt when reading their essays. You know how you felt when writing them; you know how you feel now; but we are sure you do not know how you will feel in a few minutes, when the winners' names shall have been read. Now, how did the Judges feel as they read what so many of you took such pains to write?

"I am sure I speak for all of them when I say that they were very sympathetic. Between the lines they read a great many hopes and fears, much of honest endeavor, and a good deal of careful study and close observation.

"This made them, also, feel kindly. They were glad whenever they found a real good essay and sorry when one was not so good. Without knowing who the writer was, they always wished better success next time, when an essay was examined that had real merit, but not quite enough of merit to be a prize winner. There were only thirty-eight prizes, and eight hundred and five of you will not win a prize. This compelled the Judges to have twenty-one regrets to every one congratulation. This is very trying to such sympathetic and kind-hearted people as all these thirty-one ladies and gentlemen are. If there were any exception to all this, it was when an essay was read that showed marks of sheer carelessness and literary slovenliness. That sort made your Judges feel almost cross. When an essayist is competent to write what would otherwise be a very creditable essay, and spoils it by misspelling words and tangling phrases or whole sentences, in such a way that it is clearly the result of heedlessness, rather than of ignorance, we do not waste much sympathy on that essay. I am glad to say that there were not many such, but even a few are too many.

"Please permit a few words of caution in view of future contests. Do not think that the more objects you mention the better your essay will be. Some of the papers were not much more than catalogues of objects seen, with from two to four lines about each one. From such an essay we can get no idea of the general intelligence of the writer. Neither is it best to select but one object, though some admirable essays were written treating of but one thing that was seen. The best way is to select from two or three objects and give to each one the space that in your judgment its importance deserves.

"There is sometimes an unevenness in the merit of the essays that is surprising. Some written by pupils in Steps Thirteen and Fourteen are easily superior to some written by pupils in the High School; some that start off finely soon begin to deteriorate and end disastrously. With such 'well begun' is not 'half done' by any means. Some pupils were evidently misled by the subject, 'AN AFTERNOON AT THE CARNEGIE MUSEUM.' Their essays began with an account of their plans to visit the Museum, included what they did on the way there and on the way home, made some mention of the art gallery and the statuary in the halls, and, as an episode of the afternoon, wrote a little about the Museum. Some such productions were interesting, but missed the mark set by the Trustees in the subject, and so failed to win a prize.

"One other thing, and then I shall be done with this part of what I have to say. Perhaps too much has already been said by way of suggestion, but the Judges wish the greatest possible success to all who may try again next year. Hence these hints. Do not make your essay too bookish. Get the facts into your minds so thoroughly that it will not be difficult for you to express them in the way in which you usually converse, in the style that is natural to you. It is not pleasant to read an essay written by a pupil in our Public Schools that reads as though Macaulay, Daniel Webster, Charles Darwin, Thomas H. Huxley, or Ralph Waldo Emerson had written it. Boys and girls of themselves do not write that way. Such essays seem to have wandered out of the Library, strayed into the Museum, and been captured by the essayist. While you are writing, the only book you had better have by you is the dictionary.

"In concluding these remarks, most of which have been addressed to the contestants, let me turn from them to others present. No numerals can measure the dynamics of education. It is easy to say that eight hundred and forty-three young people have come to this building, entered this museum, walked through each room on both floors, seen things, and then written about them. But is that all? How many books or parts of books have been carefully read? How many questions asked? How many conversations held? How many ideas born and more or less developed? How many other people interested and led to learn something to them unknown before? How many—but no, we must stop. These 'how manys' would lead us we know not whither. Good things once begun are never done.

"To my mind it is not improbable that in 1950 some world-renowned naturalist, geologist, mineralogist, anatomist, geographer, or other scientist, will tell those who seek to know about his life that he found his first inspiration for his great career in a visit made when a school-boy in Pittsburgh to a Museum of which Dr. W. J. Holland was Director, the Museum being a part of the great Institute given to the city by Mr. Andrew Carnegie. He will say that he made the visit in order to write an essay about what he saw, that some men and women acted as judges of the essays, that he has forgotten who any of them were, but that he remembers winning one of the prizes."

When Dr. Stanton had concluded, Mr. C. C. Mellor introduced Prof. Samuel Andrews, the Superintendent of Public Instruction of the City of Pittsburgh, who, in his usual felicitous vein, addressed the pupils, pointing out to them the great progress that had been made in the city of Pittsburgh in recent years in providing for the instruction of youth, and suggesting that the time was near at hand when it would no longer be customary for Pittsburghers to point to other cities and localities as better furnished with educational facilities than their own. "The day is even now at hand," he said, "when it will not be necessary for the boys and girls of Pittsburgh to resort to far distant institutions for an education such as they require. Through the generosity of the men of wealth of Western Pennsylvania the schools, the colleges, and the University, of this great and popular section may in a short time, it is confidently believed, come to take rank with the very foremost institutions of like character in the land."

When Professor Andrews had completed his remarks, the Chairman announced that the most interesting event of the evening, from the standpoint of the pupils, was about to take place. He called the Director of the Museum forward, and requested him to open the sealed envelopes and let the audience know who had been the prize winners of the year. Before doing so the Director stated that he had in his possession a letter which he wished to read. The letter was as follows:

"New York, 15th December, 1900.

"My Dear Lord Chancellor:—

"Eight hundred and forty-three essays this year, and the cry is still they come! This gives cheering proof that the young generation is not only to equal the present, but to surpass it in all the elements that make for material prosperity, progress, and good citizenship. Proud is the future of Pittsburgh, crowded as it is with the ambitious youth of both sexes. The prophet would have saved the city if 'peradventure there be fifty righteous persons in it.' If Pittsburgh were in jeopardy we should be able to prove that there were at least eight hundred and forty-three for whose sake any city should be spared.

"Always very truly yours,

"ANDREW CARNEGIE."

"Dr. W. J. Holland, Pittsburgh, Pa."

As the Director concluded his reading, the audience burst into enthusiastic applause.

The envelopes containing the true names of the successful contestants were then opened one by one, and as they were announced, they advanced to seats in front of the platform. When all the contestants in a certain class had been announced, they came forward in a body to the platform and received, at the hands of the Chairman of the Museum Committee, the prizes awarded to them. The first group thus summoned consisted of prize winners representing the various High Schools, then came the prize winners in Step Fourteen of the Grammar Schools, and lastly the prize winners belonging to Step Thirteen in the Grammar Schools.

When all the pupils had received their prizes, the Director announced that he had also been instructed to award prizes to those teachers who had been most successful in enlisting the interest of their pupils in the work of the contest. The names of these teachers were then announced by him, and the prizes, consisting of books, suitably inscribed, were distributed.

Following the award of prizes to the teachers, the Director of the Museum called upon Col. S. H. Church, whom he introduced as "The father of the Prize Essay Contest," to make a few remarks. Col. Church entertained the audience for a few moments with a facetious account of the deliberations of the Trustees at the time when the holding of such a contest was first under discussion, and spoke with evident feeling of the pleasure which he, as one of the members of the Board, felt in common with his fellow Trustees in view of the successful manner in which the contests had issued from year to year.

The benediction was then pronounced by Rev. Henry T. McClelland, and the audience dispersed.

The following is a list of the teachers to whom prizes were awarded for the largest number of pupils represented in the contest from their classes:

Miss Evelyn F. Arbogast, Luckey School; Miss Carrie E. Atkinson, Garfield School; Miss Belle Hanlon, Peabody School; Miss Nellie W. Jillson, Fulton School; Miss Margaret Johnston, Peabody School; Miss Jane G. McGonigle, Garfield School; Miss Anna McClurg, Luckey School; Miss Margaret McQuiston, Sterrett School; Miss B. Ursula Reis, Mt. Washington School; Miss Jane Treffinger, Grant School.

THE FIRST PRIZE ESSAY IN STEP FOURTEEN.

An Afternoon with Bird Friends as Seen in the Carnegie Museum.

There is little or no opportunity to see and get acquainted with bird-life when one must live even on the outskirts of a great city. The real home birds are afraid of the city and more fearful of the noisy, quarrelsome sparrows.

One who loves birds, but has not the chance to see them in their natural homes, may find very much pleasure in the stuffed specimens of the Carnegie Museum. I have known many of these Museum birds in an Indiana home, and hope some day to find them out among the Pennsylvania hills.

We have not time, nor am I able to talk about most of the specimens. I just want to tell you about a few that are my friends.

The curators have placed the robin group very near the door, perhaps because the robin is the first to wake us in the spring, and first in most people's affections. The beautiful apple blossoms are contrasted with the winter effects of the next—a case containing a real rail fence, a confusion of autumn leaves, and a covey of quails—some of them very near death, I'm afraid, for a dog on the other side of the fence is "pointing" unerringly.

Pennsylvania's birds are gathered together in a long case—over two hundred of them—from the smallest of the fly-catchers to the big "bird of ill omen."

The kingbird is there, with his head lower than he usually holds it; for he is just a big fly-catcher, keeping his head high as he watches for insects.

The warblers are represented, and if one could get them to move and sing, he might get their puzzling family affairs straightened out.

Near the middle of the group I found an old friend—the brown creeper. He looks out of place as he is mounted, for in life he never perches, but clings to the bark of the tree, braces himself with his stubby tail, and digs away for insects. When he reaches the top of the tree he gives a satisfied “cheet,” and is off for some newer place. He isn’t a very sociable bird, for he always visited our trees alone.

Then, there is the scarlet tanager, most often seen in our orchards; the beautiful, but wicked blue jay; the nervous cedar wax-wing; the house wren, which likes to live in queer places—our old woodshed, for example. These with a score of others as well known.

But before we close we must mention the Baltimore Oriole—shown here as he makes love to his mate. I remember well the first oriole I ever saw to know it. My brother had found one half crippled and together we took care of it for over a week. As it became stronger it scolded at our approach and even sang one morning. A few days later we let it go back among the trees, and, as I hope, back to its mate, for when it was caught another oriole screamed among the near-by trees.

But although the Museum birds are natural in everything else, they cannot sing, and this is the best of bird-life to me—the music of which a minor Indiana writer has sung:

“Jest get out and stop yer thinkin'
    Of this muss o’ woe and sin;
Jest spread out and go to drinkin'
    All this throbbin’ gladness in!”
